Race to the South Pole: A Tale of Two Leaders

In 1910, two very different leaders went head-to-head in a race to conquer the South Pole, the world's last wild frontier. Robert Falcon Scott, the pre-eminent British naval officer and Roald Engelbreth Amundson, the down-to-earth Norwegian adventurer, both sailed south to claim the pole for their respective kings.

In this incredible leadership seminar, you will be given a front row seat to the inner thoughts and motivations of the two leaders as they take their teams to where no man has ever gone before. You will see how a more inspired leadership style is able to avoid calamity and minimize losses through planning, preparation and flawless execution. While the more traditional, top down leadership style bumbles and stumbles their way to the pole and eventual death.

The lessons are just as applicable today as they were then. 90% of organizations worldwide still use this ineffective, top down management model of leadership. In this seminar, you will see an alternative way of leading that inspires each person to contribute at their highest level without the pain and suffering of top down. And we will share a valuable tool to help you kill the chaos, rework and waste that erodes your performance and results!

Join us on an immersive leadership journey like you have never seen, heard or felt before!

Book a private seminar for your next company event TODAY!
